

Search for "Kruger millions" abandoned

The search by an American expedition for the reputed Kruger Millions has been abandoned. On closer examination of the site on which the search was conducted it was found that the surroundings did not correspond to the landmarks which were given to the search party beforehand.

The quest for the supposed fortune in gold bullion reported to have been buried somewhere in the Eastern Transvaal during the Anglo Boer War was discussed in the last issue of the Digest. The latest expedition was sponsored by an American lawyer.

When the party reached the farm indicated by their information they found that there was no "cave behind a waterfall" in which the treasure was to have been found.
